Capital District Community Gardens, the non-profit which nourishes healthy communities throughout the region, will plant 40 trees in city parks and in front of private residences in the city of Cohoes next Friday. This planting is the first of two CDCG urban greening projects funded by a grant from the Cohoes Savings Bank Foundation. The organization plans to plant 60 more trees in Cohoes next fall.

Cohoes High School students will participate in planting the trees under the supervision of CDCG staff and trained community volunteers. This event offers members of the press the opportunity to photograph a popular community project and to speak with those who have made the planting possible, including Cohoes city officials and CDCG's Program Manager Sharon DiLorenzo.
